LOYOLA HOLDING FIRST ANNUAL BILINGUAL SOCCER CLINIC

Loyola College, which has enjoyed past success in promoting amateur hockey, basketball and football by holding annual coaching clinics, is now adding the sport of soccer to this list. The First Annual Bilingual Soccer Clinic will be held at the Loyola Athletic Complex on Saturday, May 15, commencing at 10:00 A.M.

With soccer interest in Quebec at a new high, the time was deemed propitious to promote and upgrade the teaching of soccer at the various levels of competition. The coaching area has to be considered a key to this aim. Registration in the province is now at an all-time high.

One factor in the greater interest in the sport is the establishment of a professional team this year, the Montreal Olympics, who compete in the North American pro circuit. Members of the Montreal Olympics Soccer Club will be featured at the clinic, which is being held one day prior to their home debut.

Loyola has been developing championship soccer teams since the sport was included in the intercollegiate program. The Warriors have won the Ottawa-St. Lawrence Athletic Association title four of the last five years. This year Bill Betts' squad went to the CIAU Nationals, losing out to Memorial University 3-2 in the Canadian finals in Toronto.

Directing the clinic will be Harry Hus, a former Loyola star himself who has been working very closely with the Loyola soccer program over the past four years.

Attached is a program of guest speakers.
